Challenges of Forensic Evidence: Observations of a New DPP

Keynote address by John Champion S.C.
Director of Public Prosecutions

followed by

Commentary from
Karl Kent OAM
Director - Forensic Services Department
Victoria Police

Synopsis

The use of forensic evidence has become an integral part of criminal prosecutions. It is becoming increasingly important, complex and sometimes controversial, as the science develops. There is an increasing dependence on forensic science and a vital need for it to be carefully understood and presented in criminal cases.

What challenges do these issues pose for criminal prosecutors? In his first keynote address as Director of Public Prosecutions, John Champion S.C. will discuss some of the challenges the use of forensic evidence brings to criminal prosecutions, how these are being responded to and his aspirations in his new role.
